ABSTRACT

The guide presents an overview of the textual and microfilmed records located at the Seattle Branch of the National Archives of the United States. Established in 1969, the Seattle Archives Branch is one of 11 branches which preserve and make available for research those U.S. Government records of permanent value created and maintained by Federal agencies. The Seattle Branch serves the states of Alaska, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington. The textual and microfilmed records identified in this guide contain basic documentation for the study of subjects such as history, economics, public administration, political science, law, ethnology, and genealogy. Records are listed according to six categories: U.S. Government--General, Legislative Branch, Judicial Branch, Executive Branch, Records of or Relating to Other Governments, and Other Holdings. Executive Branch holdings comprise the bulk of the guide. They include records from the Departments of State, Treasury, Defense, Justice, Interior, Commerce, Labor, and Transportation. Information is given concerning limited loan arrangements. The guide can serve as a model for others who want to develop a handbook of their holdings. (Author/AV)

ARCHIVES BRANCH

SEATTLE FEDERAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS CENTER

GENERAL

The National Archives of the United States is that body of records that documents American history from the First Continental Congress and includes the permanently valuable records of the three branches of the Federal Government. The archives are preserved and made available because of their continuing value to government operation; to protect both public and private rights; and for research use by scholars, students, and the general public.

The General Services Administration, through the National Archives and Records Service (NARS), operates a nationwide system of depositories that contains segments of the National Archives of the United States. Included are the National Archives Building in Washington, D.C., the six Presidential Libraries, and fifteen Federal Records Centers, eleven of which include archives branches. The eleven regional archives branches, established in 1969, generally preserve and make available for research those U. S. Government records of permanent value created and maintained by field offices of Federal agencies. (See Appendix A for a list of the regional archives and the areas they serve.) In addition to accessioning textual records, regional archives branches have begun to acquire copies of many of the NARS microfilm publications. Seattle Archives Branch holdings also include microfiche, filmstrips, sound recordings, and videotapes.

The Archives Branch in the Seattle Federal Archives and Records Center has a research room, microfilm reading equipment, document reproduction facilities, and a small reference library. The library includes various NARS publications: bulletins, conference materials, inventories, and special guides to particular areas, periods, or subjects. Other reference aids provide resource material on genealogy, Indian affairs, the Bicentennial, forestry and conservation, the Pacific Northwest, Alaska, archives administration, Presidential Libraries, and other topics. Also in the library are ninety preliminary reports prepared by and for the Public Land Law Review Commission from 1968 to 1970. These relate to all aspects of public land law requirements and contain data on resources, economics, and fiscal matters.

This guide presents only a general view of the textual records and microfilmed records available at the Seattle Archives Branch. The task of analyzing, arranging, describing, and otherwise establishing completely adequate control over all the records described here is still unfinished. The description of records, therefore, is necessarily provisional.

The unit of entry in this guide is the "Record Group," following the pattern of the NARS Guide to the National Archives of the United States. The term "Record Group," which is followed by a number and appears after the name of a federal agency or records creator, refers to a system of administrative control used by NARS for the records in its custody. (See Appendix E for a Glossary of basic archival terms used in this guide.) The arrangement of descriptions of microfilmed records and textual records together, according to record groups, reflects the organic relationship between federal agency headquarters' records, which have been deposited in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. (microfilmed copies of which are sent to the regional archives branches) and textual records of their field offices in the Pacific Northwest which have been deposited in the Seattle Archives Branch. For a list of record groups arranged by record group number see Appendix B.

The Seattle Federal Archives and Records Center is located about two miles northeast of the University of Washington, at 6125 Sand Point Way NE, Seattle, Washington 98115. Research facilities are open to the public Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., except federal holidays. Phone: 206-442-4500 (FTS 399-4500).

TEXTUAL RECORDS

The records described in this guide are those accessioned into the legal custody of the National Archives of the United States and are in the physical custody of the Seattle Archives Branch. Textual record holdings presently total almost 14,000 cubic feet (approximately 460 cubic meters) and date from 1841 to the 1950's. This represents a tiny fraction (about 5%) of the total volume of records (300,000 cubic feet) now stored in the Federal Archives and Records Center in Seattle. Most of these are disposable administrative (housekeeping) records of no historical value.

Archival records in the Seattle Center originated in Federal Government field offices located in Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington. As noted above, these regional records complement agency headquarters records deposited in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. Dates indicated are generally those of the oldest and most recent documents included in the records.

Recently deposited noncurrent records in the Center also may be of permanent, historical value. However, these have not been accessioned into the Archives and are presently in the legal custody of the originating agency. Before a researcher may use them, the agency will have to grant permission under the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act of 1974. The Center can refer patrons to the appropriate agency records officer.

Textual records may be used only in our search room. They are not available for interinstitutional loan, except by permission of the Archivist of the United States.

MICROFILMED RECORDS

In addition to the textual records created by Federal agencies in the Pacific Northwest, the Archives Branch also receives and purchases microfilm publications of the National Archives and Records Service. These publications, on 35- and 16-mm. microfilm reels, reproduce with introductions and annotations some of the most significant records in the National Archives Building. They contain basic documentation for the study of history, economics, public administration, political science, law, ethnology, genealogy, and other subjects.

All microfilm publications listed on the following pages, except the 1900 Census and the 1900 Soundex, may be borrowed on interinstitutional loan for use in your local library, or you may use the microfilm in our search room. Details concerning interinstitutional loan procedures may be found on page 5. Please remember that only the regional archives branches have microfilm which is available for loan. The National Archives in Washington, D.C. does not loan microfilm or original records.

This guide includes all microfilm held by the Seattle Archives Branch. NARS official publications carry "M" or "T" numbers. Usually, each "M" publication reproduces an entire series of records and has an introduction describing the origin, content, and arrangement of the records filmed. Descriptive pamphlets are available for most "M" publications. The pamphlet contains the publication's introduction and a roll-by-roll breakdown of the records filmed. Copies of the pamphlets are available through the Seattle Archives Branch. An unofficial microfilm publication, MR3, "Microfilm Publications Descriptive Pamphlets," reproduces those pamphlets available in the Seattle Archives Branch as of 1973. Additional pamphlets have been received by the Branch but have not been filmed.

"T" publications supplement "M" publications. They are not usually a reproduction of a complete series of records but may be a segment, by date or subject, of a larger series. In many cases "T" publications were filmed as a result of a special reference request. These publications contain no introductions, nor are pamphlets available for them, but they do have roll lists. "M" and "T" publications may be purchased from the Publications Sales Branch, National Archives and Records Service, Washington, D.C. 20408.

For a description of National Archives and Records Service microfilm publications available in Washington, D.C. see Catalogue of National Archives Microfilm Publications, 1974. In this edition only Record Group 59, General Records of the Department of State, has roll-by-roll descriptions.

Two other useful catalogues should be mentioned: Federal Population Censuses, 1790-1890: A Catalogue of Microfilm Copies of the Schedules (Washington, D.C.: NARS, 1977), which gives a roll-by-roll breakdown of the Federal populations schedules; and The American Indian: A Select Catalog of National Archives Microfilm Publications (Washington, D.C.: NARS, 1972).

Information on additional publications distributed after June 30, 1975, is published periodically in Prologue: The Journal of the National Archives. Titles of post-1974 microfilm publications may also be obtained by directing inquiries to the Publications Sales Branch, National Archives and Records Service, Washington, D.C. 20408.

Some of our microfilms are not official NARS publications. These items, carrying "I" numbers, have been acquired by the Seattle Branch through other means to assist researchers in this region. They are available for interinstitutional loan or use in our search room, but reproduction may be restricted by copyright or other legal agreements. Inquiries about these microfilms should be addressed to: Chief, Archives Branch, Federal Archives and Records Center, 6125 Sand Point Way, NE, Seattle, Washington 98115.

To locate microfilm publications in this guide by record group consult either the table of Contents, or Appendix B: List of Record Groups Arranged by Record Group Number.

To locate microfilm publications by date span of the records see Appendix C: Chronological List of Microfilm. This list includes the record group number to which the microfilm belongs and the page where the microfilm can be found in the Guide.

To locate microfilm publications by "M," "T," "I," or "P" number see Appendix D: Numerical List of Microfilm. This list includes the record group number to which the microfilm belongs and the page where the microfilm can be found in the Guide.

Appendix F lists NARS microfilm publications received after the Guide had been proofread and sent to press. Those microfilms are incorporated in both Appendix C (Chronological List of Microfilm) and Appendix D (Numerical List of Microfilm). As additional microfilm publications are received, they will be listed in Appendix F.

B. Request NARS microfilm publications on the "Interlibrary Loan Request" form as prescribed by the ALA Code using the following instructions:

1. Show the NARS "M" or "T" number in the "Call No." box and the roll number wanted in the "Author" space on the ILL form (see List). If "M" or "T" number and/or roll numbers are not known, explain as fully as possible the material wanted, including dates, in the "Title" space on the ILL form.

RECORDS OF DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES

(RECORD GROUP 21)

TEXTUAL RECORDS

Records of District Courts of the United States, 1859-1973. 5769 cf. (192.23 m3) One Draft Preliminary Inventory.

Included in this Record Group are records of U. S. circuit courts and U. S. district courts. Circuit courts in general had jurisdiction over what are today called civil actions. These include land disputes and patent infringement cases. In addition, the circuit courts had appellate powers from the district courts. Circuit courts were abolished by an act approved in 1911, and their records and most of their functions were transferred to the district courts.

District courts had jurisdiction over admiralty, criminal, bankruptcy, and certain civil cases. After 1911 they assumed jurisdiction over the civil cases formerly heard by the circuit courts. Circuit Courts of Appeal, which have no original jurisdiction, assumed the circuit courts' appellate powers.

Each court generated two forms of records: (1) bound volumes reflecting the work of the court, such as dockets, minutes, orders, final records, and indexes, which have generally been retained by the clerks of the courts, and (2) the documents for each individual case -- subpoenas, briefs, pleadings, depositions, et cetera, which have been transferred to the Archives Branch.

Archives Branch holdings include records of the following:

Alaska, 1889-1958. 720 cf.
U. S. District Court. Included are admiralty, bankruptcy, civil, and criminal case files; dockets and other book records; naturalization records; and records of U. S. commissioners. Holdings are comprised of materials from the following locations: Anchorage, 1902-45; Cordova, 1911-43; Fairbanks, 1900-45; Idatarod, 1910-24; Juneau, 1889-1950; Ketchikan, 1911-45; Nome, 1900-45; Ruby, 1913-20; Seward, 1911-41; Skagway, 1900-18; Valdez, 1902-38.

Customs collection districts were established in 1789, and the boundaries changed from time to time until 1913, when a single district was established in each state and territory.

In each district was a headquarters port with a customhouse. The collector was responsible for collecting duties, keeping records of and reporting his financial transactions, admeasuring and documenting American merchant vessels, administering the customhouses and lighthouses (until 1852) in his district or region, collecting hospital moneys from seamen and accounting for their stays in marine hospitals, and administering revenue cutters assigned to his district (until 1871). The enforcement of other acts for the protection of American seamen and American and foreign passengers, and the forwarding of basic data on immigration, imports, and exports (until 1923) became his responsibility. Upon occasion the collector acted as the depository of Federal funds and collected taxes for the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The naval officer, coordinate in rank with the collector, was required to keep separate accounts and copies of all manifests and entries, and to countersign certain of the collector's accounts. The surveyor, under the collector's supervision, kept a daily record of all vessel arrivals and clearances and was assisted by inspectors, weighers, and gagers in the collection and payment of bounty allowances and fees and the admeasurement of foreign vessels for tonnage duties.

Records of Collectors of Customs, Puget Sound District. Materials include correspondence, journals, and financial records relating to import and entry of merchandise into the U. S., control of the movement of vessels, documentation, measurement, and inspection of vessels, operation of vessels and employment of seamen, enforcement of custom and navigation laws.

Although the Mint was nominally an independent agency, the Secretary of the Treasury supervised its coinage operations from 1835 to 1873, and after 1857 the Director was required by law to submit his annual report to the Secretary. The Bureau manufactures domestic and foreign coins, acquires metals for coinage, produces medals of a national character, assays, refines, and receives, stores, and sells gold and silver bullion. Until October 9, 1961, the Director administered regulations issued under the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 and those concerning newly mined silver, and collected statistics on U.S. gold and silver production.

TEXTUAL RECORDS

Records of the Internal Revenue Service, 1897-1917. 6 cf. (0.20 m3)

The Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was established in the Treasury Department in 1862 to help finance the Civil War. Wartime taxes were gradually abolished or reduced until only taxes on liquor and tobacco existed in 1883. From that time until 1913 the Bureau was chiefly concerned with the collection of taxes on these two commodities, although other tax or regulatory activities were occasionally assigned to it. It enforced the 1894 income tax and collected corporation income taxes after 1909. With the adoption of the 16th amendment in 1913, the collection of income taxes became one of the Bureau's principal functions.

Branch holdings consist of original monthly assessment lists for individuals and corporations in the following areas: District of Montana, 1897-1917; District of Oregon, 1910-1916; and District of Washington, 1909-1917.

One Draft Preliminary Inventory.

The Offices of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Register of the Treasury at first handled the disposition of the public domain, but in 1812 the General Land Office was established as a bureau in the Department to administer all public land transactions except surveying and mapping work. Surveyors General conducted surveys and mapped public lands almost independently until 1836, when they were placed in the GLO. In 1849 the GLO was transferred to the Department of the Interior. In 1946 the GLO and the Grazing Service were consolidated to form the Bureau of Land Management. The Bureau classifies, manages, and disposes of public lands and their resources, and it administers Federally owned mineral resources on non-Federal lands and on the Outer Continental Shelf.

Records of Superintendencies of Indian Affairs

During the 19th century there were two principal types of field jurisdictions within the Bureau of Indian Affairs: superintendencies and agencies. Superintendents had general responsibility for Indian affairs in a geographical area, usually a Territory; agents were immediately responsible for the affairs of one or more tribes. Until the 1870's most agents were responsible to a superintendent. The records of a superintendency relate to almost all aspects of Indian administration in the jurisdiction, including treaties, Indian subsistence, claims arising from Indian removal, land reserves, intrusions on Indian lands, law and order, hostilities and depredation claims, annuity payments to Indians, location of agencies, schools, purchase of supplies, employees, and accounts. Most correspondence of the superintendent was conducted with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and with agents in the superintendency, but there was also correspondence with Army officials, Indians, businessmen, and others.

TEXTUAL RECORDS

Records of the Alaskan Territorial Government, 1884-1958. 297 cf. (9.90 m3).

From the time the United States purchased Alaska from Russia in 1867 to the passage of an act of May 17, 1884, there was no formal civil government in Alaska. Limited control of the area was exercised by the U.S. Army, 1867-77: the Department of the Treasury through the Collector of Customs at Sitka, other collectors, and the Revenue-Cutter Service, ca. 1877-79; and the Department of the Navy, 1879-84.

The 1884 act provided for the civil government of Alaska under a Governor, established the temporary seat of that government at Sitka, and conferred district status on Alaska. It also empowered the Secretary of the Interior to regulate the enforcement of Federal laws relating to mining claims and provide for education in the area. Under an act of July 24, 1897, a surveyor general was appointed for the U. S. District of Alaska. Homestead laws were extended to the District and provisions were made for railroad rights-of-way by an act of May 14, 1898. An act of June 6, 1900, assigned to the civil government responsibility for the care of the insane under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Provisions of that act also extended and defined the organization of the civil government and the courts. Alaska was formally designated a U.S. Territory and its capital was established at Juneau by an act of August 24, 1912. The Alaska Mental Health Enabling Act of July 28, 1956, transferred the Interior Department's responsibility for the care of the insane to the Territorial government. Provisions for admitting Alaska into the Union as a State were included in an act of July 7, 1958, and the formal admission was completed January 3, 1959, under Presidential Proclamation 3269.

These include the Executive Office central file ("Term of Office File"), 1884-1920; administrative records, 1885-1912; the Governors' annual reports, 1917-57; letters received and sent by the Secretary of Alaska, 1900-13; general correspondence, 1909-58; Territorial government legislative records, 1913-39; reports from surveys and studies, 1910-58; records relating to emergency relief programs, 1934-41, and to the Alaska rural rehabilitation project, 1935-49; expenditure and accounting records, 1913-52; and correspondence relating to the care of the insane, 1905-33.

The two Divisions were consolidated into the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions in 1942. The Farm Credit Administration (FCA) was created March 27, 1933, as an independent agency to consolidate the functions of all Federal agencies concerned primarily with agricultural credit. The FCA assumed functions of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, directed by the Federal Farm Loan Board; the Federal Farm Board; the Crop Production and Seed Loan Offices of the Department of Agriculture; and regional agricultural credit corporations. Under provisions of the Farm Credit Act of June 16, 1933, the FCA established production credit corporations and associations providing credit for farm and ranch operations and created banks for cooperatives as a permanent source of credit for farmers' cooperative associations. An act of January 31, 1934, made the FCA responsible for the management of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and from 1934 to 1942 it also supervised Federal credit unions. On July 1, 1939, the FCA was placed under the Department of Agriculture, but on December 4, 1953, with the exception of its Cooperative Research and Service Division (renamed Farm Cooperative Service), it again became an independent agency.

APPENDIX E: GLOSSARY

Accession: The transfer of legal title and physical custody of records to the Archives Branch. The term is also used to mean the records themselves. Most archival materials are accessioned from the reservoir of records stored in the Federal Records Center and physically transferred to the Archives Storage Area.

Archives: (archival records, or archival materials). Records of an organization, agency, or institution which are inactive, noncurrent, and of permanent historical value. Archival records may be of continuing legal, fiscal, or administrative value. The phrase "Seattle Archives Branch" indicates two other uses of the term. It may be used to refer to the place where archival records are kept, or to the agency which preserves and makes such records available.

Document: Roughly synonymous with "Record." Any single recorded item, in manuscript or other form.

Guide: For an archival repository, a description of its holdings which establishes intellectual control by indicating the nature, quantity, and relationships between the holdings. Guides may be comprehensive or limited to holdings on particular geographic areas, subjects, or periods.

Inventory: In the National Archives and Records Service an inventory is a finding aid that describes records accessioned from government agencies. A brief organizational/administrative history of the agency is followed by descriptions of the different record series, including their inclusive dates, volume, and arrangement.

Manuscript: Any document which is handwritten or typed. The term may also apply to a carbon or letterpress copy of such a document.

Microfilm: Film which contains record photographs that have been reduced in size. NARS microfilms are on 16- and 35-mm film reels and require a microfilm reel-to-reel reader. Microfilm is one type of microcopy; other types are microfische and microcards.

Record: Roughly synonymous with "Document." Any item of recorded information.

APPENDIX E

Record Group: A body of organizationally and functionally related records established with particular regard for the administrative history, complexity, and the volume of the records and archives of any agency. A typical record group consists of the records of a bureau, or some other comparable unit of an executive department at the bureau level, or the records of an independent agency of somewhat comparable importance in the government's administrative hierarchy. When the name of a particular agency is part of a record group title, it should be understood that the records of predecessor agencies are frequently included in the record group.

Series: (record series). Records created, used, or maintained as a filing unit which were created from the same activity, or function, and are usually similar in type and/or form. Examples are Correspondence, Reports, Minutes, Court Dockets.

Textual Record: Any paper based, written record, whether handwritten, printed, or typed.

APPENDIX F
